Traffic deaths occurred on the nation's highways at a pace Sunday which safety officials said could set a record for a Labor Day holiday weekend. About halfway through the 78

The National Safety Council, which had estimated 430 to 520 lives might be lost in traffic during the holiday period, said the record Labor Day toll of 501 deaths, established last year, could be exceeded if the current pace of fatal accidents continues to the end of the holiday period. Labor Day In America

America's Labor Day sets no bells a-ringing in the Kremlin, despite Communism's professed solicitude for the working people of the world. Instead, the annual salute to the American workingman once again taunts Communism's failure to conquer a way of life Karl Marx rated a push-

Actually, there is nothing at all strange in the American workingman's resistance to the promise of Communism. The class warfare theme imported into the United States never really hatched.

To the Marxists, the most perplexing thing about America is that this almost classless society has been achieved without tyranny, without loss of human dignity and with only such infringement of liberty as the people themselves voluntarily yielded. Contrast this with the Soviet system, the absence of human dignity and liberty and the persistent failure of Marxism to create a workers' paradise.

There is an ancient Latin precept that Labor Conquers All. It is a popular motto of graduating classes and recognizes the fact that virtually everyone is a laborer whether he is an owner or an employe.

The fruits of labor are within our own system. The destruction of labor is in a dictatorship. It is probable that the overwhelmingly body of labor is convinced of that.

Labor Day commemorates not only the gains of American workingmen down through the years but even more important, the nation's fundamental belief in the individual and liberty, in limitation of government and in a higher power guiding America on toward a great des-

These Days

By John Chamberlain

New Clothes For Old Day

Labor Day was once the great American Federation of Labor holiday, set up as a foil to May Day, which was the exclusive property of the Communists. It was supposed to represent the orderly dignity of labor as against the Marxist concept of revolutionary intransigence. Stressing dignity, it was quite in tune with the character of Samuel Gompers, the A. F. of L. ounder who believed in fighting in an orderly, demoratic way for better wages and better working conditions in a society that was predominantly a middle class affair.

But even old Sam Gompers, canny man though he was, would have been surprised if he could have foreseen the evolution of his own pet holiday. It was destined to become so decidedly middle class that its original connotation of the workers' democratic holiday has been almost totally squeezed out of it. To most people it is simply the long week-end that celebrates the end of summer. The flavor is seasonal, not social, or sociological. It is the time that tennis players are moving to Forest Hills for the culminating matches of the long summer's tennis grind, the time that nine teams in the American League give up the notion of catching the Yankees, the time that the natives of shore and mountain resorts are torn between counting their change and counting the moments before they can be rid of the summer people. If one man in a million gives a thought to old Sam Gompers and the "dignity" of labor, it can be set down as a minor miracle.

Let us not be cynical, however, about this tendency of the new to fade and blend with the old and the immemorial. Actually, it is the world's best hope for peace. A "labor" holiday, taken over by a middle class which is virtually everybody, means that the fabric of our democratic society is seamless. And in Soviet Russia, which is the official champion of the claims of revolutionary May Day as against "bourgeois" Labor Day, the struggle of old, pre-revolutionary tendencies to reassert themselves is what gives pause to Khrushchev in his campaign to subvert the world.

The fact that Khrushchev is in trouble because of the universal tendency of the old to circumvent the new is borne home to us in various ways. For example, Isaac Don Levine. visiting Russia for the first time in four decades, was surprised by the interest of the younger generation in Great Russia, as against purely revolutionary, traditions. The hunger for "freedom of thought" among the young strains against the ideological walls set up by the Communist Party to contain the thrust of poets and novelists. The interesting thing, from our point of view, about Soviet intellectual life today is not that a young poet, Yevtushenko, gets into trouble with Khrushchev for publishing his "Precocious Autobiography" in French and American periodicals. The real importance of the Yevtushenko phenomenon is that a young Soviet writer should dare to assume his right in the first place to make a plea for humanity as against Communist Party orthodoxy.

The organization called Radio Liberty, which broadcasts programs in seventeen languages to the Soviet Union from high-powered transmitters in West Germany. Spain and Formosa, necessarily keeps tabs, for its own information, on what is being printed and broadcast in side the Soviet Union itself. Almost daily it is witness to old, pre-Communist ways of thinking as they come to the Ham radio operators in the Kazakh Soviet Republic surface of Soviet life in various manifestations. use their equipment to broadcast religious programs. The Kazakh Central Committee newspaper, "Lenin's Generation." denounces the radio hams in an article titled "Hooligans Wade Through the

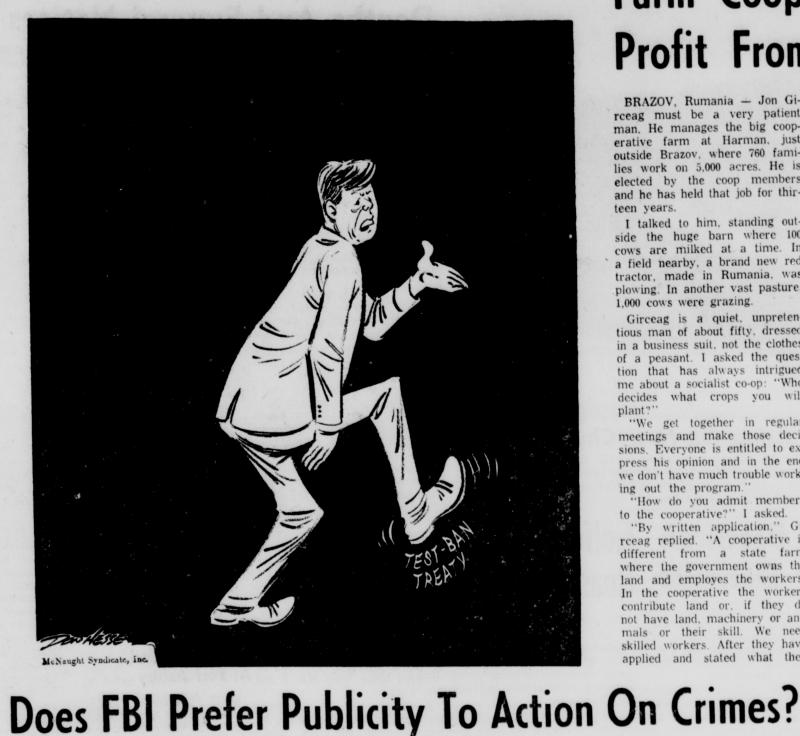

A seventeen-year-old radio ham, Valery Zherov, described by a Soviet journalist as "a self-appointed king of the ether," was finally tracked down and caught after an extensive career in broadcasting jazz and sharp contemporary satire. Even a Russian branch of Jehovah's Witnesses has used secret transmitting equipment to broadcast religious appeals in the Kazakh Republic

In Mexico, in the old days, Christian priests tried to bring the Indians to worship in churches that showed representation of the Holy Family and the Saints. The Indians, trying their hand at ecclesiastic art on their own, tried to imitate the Christian iconography. But pagan features stared through the imitations-"idols behind altars," as one student of Mexican art put it. So it goes: peoples cannot easily be deprived of old traditions. This happens to be our best insurance against a universal Communist tide.

I talked to him, standing outside the huge barn where 100 cows are milked at a time. In a field nearby, a brand new red tractor, made in Rumania, was plowing. In another vast pasture, 1,000 cows were grazing.

"We get together in regular meetings and make those decisions. Everyone is entitled to express his opinion and in the end we don't have much trouble working out the program."

'How do you admit members to the cooperative?" I asked.

"By written application," Girceag replied. "A cooperative is different from a state farm where the government owns the land and employes the workers. In the cooperative the workers contribute land or, if they do not have land, machinery or animals or their skill. We need skilled workers. After they have applied and stated what they work harder. Girceag said that schools were located on the cooperative and that schooling for eight years is compulsory for the children of the farmers. He also said that 280 new homes had been built by co-op members in the past three years. They are owned by the members, and can be sold or rented by them.

Asked whether the cooperative system had been able to improve production, Girceag said that the Harman co-op had been able to increase the production of wheat in the past ten to fifteen years from 1,400 kilograms per acre to 3,000 per acre, and that milk production had increased from between 800 and 1,000 litres per cow annually to 3,000 litres per

The milking barn is a huge building with old-fashioned stanchions and has not profited from the new milking parlor advances made by Chore Boy and other milking pioneers in the United States whereby a herd of 100 ccws can be milked by one man in around two hours.

This Rumanian cooperative had plenty of labor and was not interested in conserving manpower. For instance, the dairy herd of 1,000 cows was pastured in a field without fences, with two men leading the herd in front and two bringing up the rear. Less than fifty yards away was a field of green corn with no fence around it, and, though the pasturage was sparse where the cows were grazing, they made no effort to break away into the corn.

"If those were my cows they would be in that corn in five minutes," I told one of the herds-

'These are Communist cows," he replied. "Yours are capitalistic. Yours are accustomed to raiding other people's property.

In general, the farm cooperatives of Rumania seem to be working. Certainly they have been more successful than those of Russia. When I asked a Bucharest official about this, he pointed out that they had profited from Russian mistakes and, aniong other things, were giving farmers more incentive.

Rumania has also two advantages which he did not mention and which neither Communists nor capitalists can do much about -rain and heat. The growing season is longer in Rumania and it also gets more rain than the Soviet Union.

Russia vs. Rumania

You'll hear various opinions in Rumania about the Soviet. One is that Rumania is not going to knuckle under to cocoin - the socialist answer to western Europe's common market - by producing only raw materials. There was a time last spring when Rumania appeared to be flirting with Red China in order to bargain for its own plan of industrialization instead of becoming merely a materials supplier.

I ascertained, however, that it was East Germany and Czechoslovakia, already industrialized, not Russia, which objected to Rumania's emergence as an industrial competitor. Rumania has now won this argument and is going ahead full speed with industrialization.

Most Rumanians, while wanting to keep a certain amount of independence from Russia, have no idea of any bolt. On the contrary, they were grateful for the umbrella of military protection given them by the Red army. The Red army pulled out of Rumania five years ago, but its troops, tanks, and missiles, not far distant in Bessarabia, remain Rumania's best guarantee against foreign attack.

Ypres is a hard-luck town. It ed a desperate tactic. He found consists of 16,000 Belgians surrounded by 40 cemeteries. A railroad creeps around the edge, and the little Yperlee river flows out as fast as it can. There is an old Flemish cloth market in the center, and the bruised stones of the Cathedral of St. Martin stand in

Some call it Ee-pray. Others refer to it as Wipers. It doesn't matter. What matters is that this inoffensive town has been ground to dust under more alien heels than any other in the world. In World War I, for example, there were no fewer than three Battles of Ypres. The British and Germans fought through it so many times that the burgomeister had to open his cellar shutters in the morning to see what flag he was under. In World War II, Ypres was again on its knees before the Germans.

On May 21, 1940, it became the scene of the sellout of France. Few except the historians know this. Jacques Benoist-Mechin in his "Sixty Days That Shook the West" was the only one to tell how it happened.

The situation was this: Hitler sent the 18th Army under von Kuchler into Holland. Von Reichenau with his 6th Army was ordered to invade Belgium at Maastrich. In the Bonn-Stolberg area, von Kleist's two Panzer Armies - the 12th and 16th - were ordered to be silent. Further south, the 1st Army under von Witzleben and the 7th under Dollman were advised to make sorties against the Maginot Line.

In the north, Queen Wilhelmina hollered for help too late. She fled to England. King Leopold of the Belgians asked for assistance, and the French and British Armies poured across the border, exactly as Adolf Hitler knew they would. When they were safely in Belgium, his silent Panzers was ordered to strike through the Ardennes Forest, destroy the French 9th Army under Corap, and swing north to the Channel

This would seal the British, French and Belgians in a German sandwich. They would have von Kuchler and von Reichenau in front, and von Kleist's wild panzers behind. It started on May 10th, 1940. By the 21st, Paul Reynaud's French government was hysterical with fear.

The German communique said: . the greatest offensive of all time has had its first strategic result: our forces have reached the sea.

Revnaud dismissed Maurice Gamelin as commander-in-chief of the Armies, and called Maxime Weygand back from Beirut to take charge. The new chief need-it. He ordered a meeting of the Allied High Command for 3 p.m. on the 21st at Ypres. His plan was to ask the British, French and Belgium forces to retreat to the Yser River. Then the British and French would strike south out of Cambrai while the French Army of the Somme hammered north out of St. Quentin.

The two strikes would close the 25-mile wide German alley, and the far-flung Panzers would die of lack of petrol and ammunition. Weygand waited in Ypres two hours for General Gort. Unknown to the others, Lord Gort was planning to retreat in the opposite direction - northwest to Dunkirk. From there, he would take his defeated forces home

Present at the meeting were Weygand, King Leopold of the Belgians, General Billotte, in charge of the French First Army Group; and General Fagalde, in charge of Allied Armies liaison, Weygand worked out his plan on the blackboard. It was a desperate move, but if it worked, the French and British would again have a continuous united front and von Kleist's racing tanks would die eut on a limb.

Leopold wasn't sure he wanted to retreat with his Belgians. Gort had sent no deputy, so no one knew what the English would do. General Billotte's French group wasn't strong enough to dent the German alley alone. Weygand kept explaining that time was of the essence. If the attack could not be mounted and executed in two days, the narrow alley would be full of fresh German forces. At 7 p.m. he left, discouraged, disheartened, mute.

At 9 p.m. Lord Gort arrived. He apologized, and explained that the refugees on the road had delayed him. Billotte explained the impending battle to him, Gort had his own plan for saving his divisions, and he said nothing. He did not even volunteer the information that the British had given up on France.

"You must do what has been agreed!" General Fagalde said with some irritation. Gort made no promises. King Leopold said he would discuss it with his high command. At 11 p.m. the conference to save France broke up.

Gort left, determined to quit the Continent and get back to England. Leopold could not make up his mind, and lost his army and country. Billotte had an automobile accident at Locre and died two days later. The battle never took place. The Panzers overran France and the French surrendered to Hitler. Ypres is a hard-luck town . . .

Labor Day In America

America's Labor Day sets no bells a-ringing in the Kremlin, despite Communism's professed solicitude for the working people of the world. Instead, the annual salute to the American workingman once again taunts Communism's failure to conquer a way of life Karl Marx rated a push-

Actually, there is nothing at all strange in the American workingman's resistance to the promise of Communism. The class warfare theme imported into the United States never really hatched.

To the Marxists, the most perplexing thing about America is that this almost classless society has been achieved without tyranny, without loss of human dignity and with only such infringement of liberty as the people themselves voluntarily yielded. Contrast this with the Soviet system, the absence of human dignity and liberty and the persistent failure of Marxism to create a workers' paradise.

There is an ancient Latin precept that Labor Conquers All. It is a popular motto of graduating classes and recognizes the fact that virtually everyone is a laborer whether he is an owner

The fruits of labor are within our own system. The destruction of labor is in a dictatorship. It is probable that the overwhelmingly body of labor is convinced of that.

Labor Day commemorates not only the gains of American workingmen down through the years but even more important, the nation's fundamental belief in the individual and liberty, in limitation of government and in a higher power guiding America on toward a great des-

New Clothes For Old Day

Labor Day was once the great American Federation of Labor holiday, set up as a foil to May Day, which was the exclusive property of the Communists. It was supposed to represent the orderly dignity of abor as against the Marxist concept of revolutionary intransigence. Stressing dignity, it was quite in tune with the character of Samuel Gompers, the A. F. of L. ounder who believed in fighting in an orderly, demoratic way for better wages and better working conditions in a society that was predominantly a middle

But even old Sam Gompers, canny man though he was, would have been surprised if he could have foreseen the evolution of his own pet holiday. It was destined to become so decidedly middle class that its original connotation of the workers' democratic holiday has been almost totally squeezed out of it. To most people it is simply the long week-end that celebrates the end of summer. The flavor is seasonal, not social, or sociological. It is the time that tennis players are moving to Forest Hills for the culminating matches of the long summer's tennis grind, the time that nine teams in the American League give up the notion of catching the Yankees, the time that the natives of shore and mountain resorts are torn between counting their change and counting the moments before they can be rid of the summer people. If one man in a million gives a thought to old Sam Gompers and the "dignity" of labor, it can be set down as a minor miracle.

Let us not be cynical, however, about this tendency of the new to fade and blend with the old and the immemorial. Actually, it is the world's best hope for peace. A "labor" holiday, taken over by a middle class which is virtually everybody. means that the fabric of our democratic society is seamless. And in Soviet Russia, which is the official champion of the claims of revolutionary May Day as against "bourgeois" Labor Day, the struggle of old, pre-revolutionary tendencies to reassert themselves is what gives pause to Khrushchev in his campaign to subvert the world.

The fact that Khrushchev is in trouble because of the universal tendency of the old to circumvent the new is borne home to us in various ways For example, Isaac Don Levine. visiting Russia for the first time in four decades, was surprised by the interest of the younger generation in Great Russia, as against purely revolutionary, traditions. The hunger for "freedom of thought" among the young strains against the ideological walls set up by the Communist Party to contain the thrust of poets and novelists. The interesting thing, from our point of view, about Soviet intellectual life today is not that a young poet, Yevtushenko, gets into trouble with Khrushchev for publishing his "Precocious Autobiography" in French and American periodicals. The real importance of the Yevtushenko phenomenon is that a young Soviet writer should dare to assume his right in the first place to make a plea for humanity as against Communist Party orthodoxy.

One is that Rumania is not going to knuckle under to cocoin - the socialist answer to western Europe's common market - by producing only raw materials. There was a time last spring when Rumania appeared to be flirting with Red China in order to bargain for its own plan of industrialization instead of becoming merely a materials supplier.

I ascertained, however, that it was East Germany and Czechoslovakia, already industrialized, not Russia, which objected to Rumania's emergence as an industrial competitor. Rumania has now won this argument and is going ahead full speed with industrialization.

Most Rumanians, while wanting to keep a certain amount of independence from Russia, have no idea of any bolt. On the contrary. they were grateful for the umbrella of military protection given them by the Red army. The Red army pulled out of Rumania five years ago, but its troops, tanks, and missiles, not far distant in Bessarabia, remain Rumania's best guarantee against foreign

Does FBI Prefer Publicity To Action On Crimes?

When I was very, very young, I used to think that the men who made recordings must be perf. t. Their music, the singers I heard and the pianists, was always perfect. Somewhat later I learned that you can make a perfect recording by cutting out the bad parts and doing them over. The men who made them were just as fallible as anyone else.

It will come as no great surprise to discover that in the process of growing up I found the fallibilities on the increase, perfections on the wane. I married the only perfect person I ever met and in the course of a reporter's life which was nourished early on church news and crime stories I completely lost the hope that our public men could be private paragons. It wasn't wisdom; just repi-

Early this month there suddenly burst upon the scene Joseph Valachi, for 60 years the kind of thug who puts the lie to Hollywood's version of the underworld, too stupid to rise high in the ranks of organized crime but suddenly, according to Official Sources, which can here be translated into the Justice Department, a kingpin of American crime. A newspaper reporter and a magazine reporter were both fed the startling facts of his disclosures. Apparently as an incidental gesture, the district attorneys in areas affected by their story were also sent a 22-page report of what he had told the Justice Department. nedy administration is in the midst of a make-or-break drive to push the tax reduction bill through Congress this session and it looks like they'll make it.

Through all the political maneuvering since the Kennedy program was presented to Congress, administration spokesmen and supporters on Capitol Hill have held steadfastly that a tax cut is needed to stimulate the economy, even if it does produce larger federal deficits temporarily. This faction has been fortunate because of the greater than expected business pick-up during the first half of this year, enabling the government to announce a smaller - than - expected deficit for the 1963 fiscal year

TAX REDUCTION - The Ken- cast considerably smaller red ink spending in the current year. Treasury Secretary Douglas

Dillon was able to estimate the 1964 deficit at $9.1 billion, contrasted to an $11.9 billion original forecast - a reduction of nearly $3 billion. This has served to take some of the steam out of the conservative drive for smaller deficits before tax reductionbut it hasn't diminished the opposition oratory.

The pattern of the projected tax cut now is falling clearly into place and parallels expectations when the original tax cut-tax reform bill was presented to Congress. It's now nearly all cut and very little reform. As was anticipated, reforms would have to be played down to hold political opposition to a minimum, for only by this means could a bill be that ended June 30, and to fore- gotten through Congress.

The law officers of several communities now seem engaged in the ridiculous pursuit of insisting that their local hood is really the top man of the organizationwhatever its name is. Ypres is a hard-luck town. It consists of 16,000 Belgians surrounded by 40 cemeteries. A railroad creeps around the edge, and the little Yperlee river flows out as fast as it can. There is an old Flemish cloth market in the center, and the bruised stones of the Cathedral of St. Martin stand in defiance of war.

Some call it Ee-pray. Others refer to it as Wipers. It doesn't matter. What matters is that this inoffensive town has been ground to dust under more alien heels than any other in the world. In World War I, for example, there were no fewer than three Battles of Ypres. The British and Germans fought through it so many times that the burgomeister had to open his cellar shutters in the morning to see what flag he was under. In World War II, Ypres was again on its knees before the

On May 21, 1940, it became the scene of the sellout of France. Few except the historians know this. Jacques Benoist-Mechin in his "Sixty Days That Shook the West' was the only one to tell how it happened.

The situation was this: Hitler sent the 18th Army under von Kuchler into Holland, Von Reichenau with his 6th Army was ordered to invade Belgium at Maastrich. In the Bonn-Stolberg area, von Kleist's two Panzer Armies - the 12th and 16th - were ordered to be silent. Further south, the 1st Army under von Witzleben and the 7th under Dollman were advised to make sorties against the Maginot Line.

In the north, Queen Wilhelmina hollered for help too late. She fled to England. King Leopold of the Belgians asked for assistance, and the French and British Armies poured across the border, exactly as Adolf Hitler knew they would. When they were safely in Belgium, his silent Panzers was ordered to strike through the Ardennes Forest, destroy the French 9th Army under Corap, and swing north to the Channel

This would seal the British, French and Belgians in a German sandwich. They would have von Kuchler and von Reichenau in front, and von Kleist's wild panzers behind. It started on May 10th, 1940. By the 21st, Paul Reynaud's French government was hysterical with fear.

The German communique said: . the greatest offensive of all time has had its first strategic result: our forces have reached the sea.

Reynaud dismissed Maurice Gamelin as commander-in-chief of the Armies, and called Maxime Weygand back from Beirut to take charge. The new chief needed a desperate tactic. He found He ordered a meeting of the Allied High Command for 3 p.m. on the 21st at Ypres. His plan was to ask the British, French and Belgium forces to retreat to the Yser River. Then the British and French would strike south out of Cambrai while the French Army of the Somme hammered north out of St. Quentin.

The two strikes would close the 25-mile wide German alley, and the far-flung Panzers would die of lack of petrol and ammunition. Weygand waited in Ypres two hours for General Gort. Unknown to the others. Lord Gort was planning to retreat in the opposite direction - northwest to Dunkirk. From there, he would take his defeated forces home by boats.

Present at the meeting were Weygand. King Leopold of the Belgians, General Billotte, in charge of the French First Army Group; and General Fagalde, in charge of Allied Armies liaison, Weygand worked out his plan on the blackboard. It was a desperate move, but if it worked, the French and British would again have a continuous united front and von Kleist's racing tanks would die eut on a limb Leopold wasn't sure he wanted to retreat with his Belgians. Gort had sent no deputy, so no one knew what the English would do. General Billotte's French group wasn't strong enough to dent the German alley alone. Weygand kept explaining that time was of the essence. If the attack could not be mounted and executed in two days, the narrow alley would be full of fresh German forces. At 7 p.m. he left, discouraged, disheartened, mute.

At 9 p.m. Lord Gort arrived. He apologized, and explained that the refugees on the road had delayed him. Billotte explained the impending battle to him. Gort had his own plan for saying his divisions, and he said nothing. He did not even volunteer the information that the British had given up on France.

"You must do what has been agreed!" General Fagalde said with some irritation. Gort made no promises. King Leopold said he would discuss it with his high command. At 11 p.m. the conference to save France broke up.

Gort left, determined to quit the Continent and get back to England. Leopold could not make up his mind, and lost his army and country. Billotte had an automobile accident at Locre and died two days later. The battle never took place. The Panzers overran France and the French surrendered to Hitler.

The truck, a Ford F800 with American LaFrance equipment and a water capacity of 500 gallons, was purchased in 1958 at a cost of $15,500. An additional $1,000 was spent for rescue equipment, comprising two chromox masks and an phenealator making the total principle $18,500 with the interest amounting to $2,250.

Musial Honored, Collects 723rd Double Of Career

PHILADELPHIA (UPI)-Southpaw Curt Simmons continued his mastery of his former Phillies teammates Sunday, hurling a sixhitter to give the second place St. Louis Cardinals a 7-3 victory.

Simmons now has a 12-2 career record against the Phillies and he had little difficulty in posting his 12th win of the year against seven losses. He was touched for single runs in the fifth, sixth and eighth and allowed the Phils more than one hit in only one inning.

The Cards tagged four Phillies pitchers for 10 hits in winning the season series 10-8 and handing the slumping home team their fourth straight defeat.

Simmons tripled home a run in the second and surprised starter and loser Chris Short by stealing home. In the third, two walks surrounded Stan Musial's double to load the bases for Tim McCarver's two-run single. Simmons Fires 6-Hitter, Triples And Steals Home

PHILADELPHIA (UPI)—Southpaw Curt Simmons continued his mastery of his former Phillies teammates Sunday, hurling a sixhitter to give the second place St. Louis Cardinals a 7-3 victory.

Simmons now has a 12-2 career record against the Phillies and he had little difficulty in posting his 12th win of the year against seven losses. He was touched for single runs in the fifth, sixth and eighth and allowed the Phils more than one hit in only one inning.

The Cards tagged four Phillies pitchers for 10 hits in winning the season series 10-8 and handing the slumping home team their fourth straight defeat.

Simmons tripled home a run in the second and surprised starter and loser Chris Short by stealing home. In the third, two walks surrounded Stan Musial's double to load the bases for Tim McCarver's two-run single. George Altman's single brought a third run Boyer slammed his 20th homer, his third in three games here, in the fifth while All across and chased Short. Ken

Covington hit his 17th homer in the sixth, and Don Demeter's double produced the final Phillies

Musial, who was honored before the game, had two hits in three trips in his final appearance here.
